A 45-year-old woman presented with progressively worsening shortness of breath and newly developed pleuritic chest pain after a painless cough in the left side for 3 days. Clinical examination revealed auscultatory sound and fine crackles. Complete blood count, arterial blood gas, and conventional radiographic studies were within normal limits. High-resolution computed tomography (HRCT) revealed diffuse micronodular shadows, predominantly located at the lower lobes. The density of the lesions was even. No calcification, cavitation, or fibrosis was observed. No mass or hilar lymphadenopathy was observed. Magnetic resonance imaging showed multiple high-intensity punctate nodules on the T2-weighted image and nodules in the bilateral pulmonary parenchyma on the diffusion-weighted image. After 24 hours, the patient complained of worsening dyspnea and chest pain. The patient underwent bilateral chest tube placement to drain ple
