Palladium-catalyzed cross-coupling reactions between alkyl halides and aryl halides for the construction of tetrasubstituted carbazoles. A new and efficient strategy for the synthesis of tetrasubstituted carbazoles has been developed, which employs palladium-catalyzed cross-coupling between readily available 3-haloquinoline carboxylic acids and aryl bromides. A series of cyclic and acyclic carbazoles bearing various functional groups have been efficiently synthesized in moderate to excellent yields by the combination of the convenient nucleophilic substitution and the Pd(0)-catalyzed cross-coupling of 3-haloquinoline carboxylic acids with aryl halides.
House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi and other Democrats continue to hammer away at President Trump's recent comments about the caravan of immigrants marching toward the border, calling them racist and divisive, though they were focused on the issue after a deadly fire in California last week. "For Donald Trump to not only bring up this issue of the caravan, but to take advantage of that, to encourage that in the way that he has — those are racist comments," Pelosi said Wednesday. "He is sowing division and he is sowing hate. But you know what, he's got a history of it," she continued. Pelosi also hit Trump's recent comments about a deal to end the shutdown, saying that his words were a "positive," despite the ongoing stalemate in Washington. "The president was describing a new proposal that he thinks will help the government reopen. He knows that it will not solve the problem of the shutdown. But you know what, his words were positive," Pelosi told reporters. The Democratic leader described Trump's comments about the border caravan as "not only insensitive, they're not only racist
