Why doesn't my filter clear correctly using the # character? I'm trying to have the filter change the second time the submit button is clicked. My current code is: `$('#filter').on('change', function() { if ($('#filter').val() == '') { $('#search').prop('disabled', true); } else { $('#search').prop('disabled', false); } }); $('#filter').on('keyup', function() { $('#search').data('placeholder', $('#filter').val()); }); $('#filter').on('submit', function() { console.log('testing'); $('#search').data('placeholder', $('#filter').val()); });` If I remove the `$('#search').data('placeholder', $('#filter').val());` line, the #filter filter clears properly. The problem seems to be that the filter doesn't seem to recognize the # in `$('#search').data('placeholder', $('#filter').val());` as the filter character. I'm trying to make it so that when the search button is clicked, the #filter input clears so that it's ready to be filled in with new data, and then it's also set to the placeholder that's defined in #search. A: The `jQuery data()` method takes a string as the first argument, not an expression. You want to pass the current value of `$('#filter').val()` `$('#filter').on('change', function() { if ($('#filter').val() == '') { $('#search`
