ERBB3 predicts poor prognosis and predicts survival outcomes in osteosarcoma. The human epidermal growth factor receptor (HER) family of receptor tyrosine kinases and their ligands play important roles in tumor progression and metastasis. In the present study, we examined the mRNA and protein expression of EGFR, HER2, HER3, and ERBB4 and their ligands in osteosarcoma.

In addition, we evaluated the associations between ERBB3 mRNA expression, protein expression, clinicopathological parameters, and survival outcomes in osteosarcoma patients. We performed real-time quantitative reverse transcription-polymerase chain reaction (qRT-PCR) and immunohistochemistry (IHC) to examine the mRNA and protein expression, respectively, of EGFR, HER2, HER3, and ERBB4 and their ligands in osteosarcoma cell lines and tissues. The associations between the expression of EGFR, HER2, HER3, and ERBB4 and their ligands in tumor tissues and clinicopathological parameters were analyzed in osteosarcoma patients. In addition, we performed Kaplan-Meier survival analysis to evaluate the associations between the expression of ERBB3 and their ligands and survival outcomes in osteosarcoma patients. We identified a significant correlation between the expression of ERBB3 and its ligands in osteosarcoma cells and tissues. The mRNA expression of ERBB3 was significantly associated with the progression-free survival
