We bring you the latest music news, tour dates, videos, interviews, and reviews of your favorite genres.Australia now has two national amateur teams, after a three-day event aimed at building the game in the country took place on Monday at the Hawthorn Institute in Melbourne. The tournament, organised by the Victorian Amateur Football Association, was a celebration of the inaugural Victorian State League, which was officially launched on Monday. It was made possible by joint initiatives between the Australian and Victorian football federations and featured two men's and two women's teams. A squad made up of former professionals from the VFL and A-League, as well as student footballers from universities across Victoria, competed in a knockout competition that ended with the State League going down to the final in a penalty shoot-out. There were also two exhibition matches played during the event. The first was an All-Ages game between an A-League club, Adelaide United, and a Victorian amateur side, Melbourne Heart. The second was a curtain-raiser for the men's final between FFA Cup winners NPL Victoria side Avondale FC and a team of players from West Melbourne Spartans. The Victorian Premier League women's and youth teams were also in attendance, along with representatives from Football Federation Tasmania and the West Coast Eagles. The VMSL was announced as the highest level of football the state would have from the 2016 season and will feature teams from across Victoria, with Southern Football League clubs and even the regional Victorian Amateur Football Association comprising the competition. While the inaugural State League itself was made up of teams from both the VMSL and the Victorian Amateur Football Association, the 2019 event was made up of teams that would compete in that competition for its inaugural season. In a change to the rules, the VMSL season will not begin until May next year. 3ef4e8ef8d
