It can be seen that the ID3 tag in the header of the above file is one of these four, and its value is the same one in the other files. The remaining three files (that were not uploaded on pastebin) do not contain such tag, so there are only two possible headers that this could be, as the last line of the header is the same in all four files (it is hardcoded). I can not find the method that is used to generate the ID3 header in the other files. Is it a known method? Are there any useful tools to locate the ID3 tag? A: On Windows I would use the flamer.exe command, e.g. flamer.exe n -path C:\Path\to\file -id3 It'll list all the ID3 frames in the order they occur, which might be what you're looking for. Karen Hughes, former U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, wrote to FBI Director James Comey on Wednesday expressing concern that "over time, a pattern is emerging that the department appears to be intentionally obfuscating" the scope of the investigation. "My concern is not only that the FBI is proceeding at a deliberate pace, but also that the department's decision to withhold

A: You have a typo. as you said : elements = {'root1':root1,'root2':root2,'root3':root3} which is "root1" and not "root". change elements = {'root1':root1,'root2':root2,'root3':root3} with elements = {'root':root1,'root2':root2,'root3':root3} to fix it.
