Billy Madison Billy is a precocious child brought up by an authoritarian mother. He is obsessed with sex, and often attacks his step-mother, with whom he has a very rocky relationship. Due to Billy's biological father, he has a strong fear of the opposite sex. He is the stereotypical character that existed in the 90's. He is not seen to be evil, he is simply misguided and dumb. Examples of his stupidity include his friendship with George Michael, a bandmate, and the fact that he was the one who allowed the press to talk to him in the interview scene with his father. Also in the movie, it is revealed that George Michael has a crush on Madison, which leads to the two almost having sex. At the end of the movie, Madison goes to jail for raping George Michael. While it was never shown in the movie, the fact that Madison is a somewhat overweight boy makes him look like a sexually active gay man. All of his actions throughout the movie including calling his mother a pig, picking up his genitals while in a shower, and being caught molesting a homeless man imply this. However, by the end of the movie, he changes his ways and is portrayed as an anti-gay character. It is rumored that during production of the movie, when director Robert Zemeckis was asked whether Madison was gay, he replied "No, Madison's not gay. It's just that he likes the girl." According to the person who relayed this information, in response to this comment, they said "Oh, really?" The quick flash at the beginning of the film where he sticks his arm down the toilet is done so to "correct" a previous edit done to the film. However, this is unlikely, because the most commonly quoted part of this is "quick flash", not "quick flash at the beginning". As such, the quote is incorrect. This is also questionable, because the most commonly quoted line on this is: "Quick flash at the beginning". This is most likely because the two flash comments are different, and the beginning one is the one that has become ingrained in the Hollywood industry.
