Description of the Related Art An internal combustion engine of the type in which fuel injected is mixed with air admitted in the cylinder of the internal combustion engine is known. In such an internal combustion engine, fuel passing through a fuel passage is mixed with air passing through an air passage via a fuel injector nozzle located at a wall of the cylinder, to result in generation of a wall-fuel-air mixed gas. The wall-fuel-air mixed gas is then burnt in the combustion chamber. A particle size distribution, an amount of evaporation and a combustion heat generation rate are greatly influenced by an atomization characteristic of fuel injected. With a plurality of nozzles, pressure control for each nozzle may be carried out. As a result, the atomization characteristic of fuel injected for each nozzle may be adjusted to an appropriate 570a42141b
