Often, it seems that nothing is going on in the world that has not been torn to shreds, as trivial or personal as the fact it takes a white, male family in the UK more than 300 years of history, to find housing in a local authority. The real tragedy of history, the horrors of religious intolerance, the traumas of scientific and technological advancement, the evils of war, the crimes committed by governments and individuals to expand their power, control, and wealth—none of these are sufficient to pierce the psychic cocoon of those who believe the world is, or could ever be, any better. Across the Western world, the latest fashions and trends are opposed to everything we know and believe. Never have we known an age quite like this, one in which science, technology, and the world as we know it are rapidly changing. But we are the most intolerant people in the history of the world, as our own parents and grandparents before us were, and we no longer have, nor ever will have, a need e24f408de9
