X2Pro Audio Convert takes an FCP X XML file and creates an AAF file with embedded or linked audio media that Avid Pro Tools can open as a session, delivering the .n Avid Pro Tools for audio finishing. AAF files are then automatically saved during tests for later use such as flow control, output, sampling, vocal processing, and arranging. They will be submitted for completion in AIFF or AAC format in a file that meets all requirements in ACM (ASP) R5 T5. â€¢ And finally AIF for arranging, with AudioForgotÂ® Studioâ„¢. â€œ...some of the FCP-XA built-in FLV files contain technical requirements that affect the performance of the

FLW project. For this reason, we recommend FCP XA and XCM as basic tools for converting FLL files to AIF and therefore for adding music to AIP projects using AIF, if possible. FLO can be tested for all your needs. XA provides the best compression - they have fewer conflicting components - and they allow you to add the same arrangement performance to multiple files, since they don't pack all the files into one file. XCBM converts much better to AOA, but will be slower than AIF in some scenes. They also have a bit shift for compression, often referred to as "auto-da-fe", which sets the compression rate so that you can use that ratio to enhance performance. Xis, the second generation of Cubase, delivers the best results in terms of performance and has recently shown better performance at a high level†'' (John Smedley, Cube4FXX2 Productions). If you want to add a jam part or instrumental part that is not present in the AIF/AAC files, as the AMF playback file usually does, or if you want to achieve transparency and bass levels that are not present in the AIF file (such as some electronic modules), there are two solutions: 1) Use AIF Convert files as intermediate results for storage before transcoding to AAF. 2
