The new version includes a lot of new features and performance improvements. The main new features of GIMP 2.8 are: - An area-selection tool. GIMP 2.8 provides a way to select an area of an image using rectangular selection handles. This feature might be a step towards a'magic wand' tool. - A new tool to define a shape for the selection of an area - The retouch tool supports undoing changes that have been made - A new layer management dialog that lets you select a layer to apply an effect to, or undo, when a previous layer has been modified. - New layer-groups that allow you to group together layers for easier editing and previewing - ImageMagick plug-in integration - A number of fixes and small improvements This new version is stable and usable for most people. However, it still contains a few known critical issues (notably regarding the selection of an area) and the associated dialogs which may not work correctly. As usual, you can get the source code from the GIMP project repository (Git), to build this yourself: git://gimp.org/pub/gimp/unstable The release notes, the new features, and the various pages in the help system have more information about the new features. ChangeLog for GIMP 2.8: * Added --cursor-select to --display to support a new kind of gesture cursor. * Added an 'area-select' tool to select a rectangular region. The tool may be enabled for the cursor tool, which is useful for tasks such as cropping. 6a5afdab4c
