Advertising Read more Hanoi (AFP) A Vietnamese policeman has been captured on video apparently protecting a blind lawyer -- sparking fierce arguments on social media and further angering rights activists, who are strongly critical of the country's often-violent police. The incident came after the lawyer was jailed in mid-May and then temporarily freed last month in what activists called a desperate act of protest as he battles a police corruption probe. As she walked down a lane in the suburbs of Hanoi last Saturday, Q.Y. Nguyen told her friend over the phone that a police officer had blocked her path and was refusing to allow her to continue. The friends decided to get a video and asked the lawyer's brother-in-law to take it. The video, initially shared on YouTube and Facebook, has gone viral, becoming one of the most viewed clips in Hanoi in recent weeks and prompting angry comments on social media. Many online described the episode as "censorship" or a breach of privacy. "How are you stupid and barbaric!" wrote one commenter. "This is not a secret, everyone knows that the police are in a special position and can act arbitrarily, but why are you doing this?" asked another. Nguyen's friend has been identified as a businessman and philanthropist, who has organised art exhibitions to raise money for victims of the Vietnam war and is also a former governor. The lawyer's family has confirmed he was taken away on the day in question, according to a letter he sent the family after he was jailed. In a video dated May 30, Nguyen can be seen entering a building with a police officer and another man, and being taken inside. The lawyer's family said he has since been jailed for 44 days at Hoa Lo prison in Hanoi. The lawyer, whom his family describe as "suffering from depression" and in a "nervous condition," had been in and out of jail for months over the course of an ongoing graft probe involving high-profile figures. Vietnam's police chief has since said he "regrets" the incident, but the lawyer's family said he continued to be arrested on "vague charges" while the toll was mounting for his personal mental health. Activists have lambasted the Vietnamese authorities for their brutal treatment of dissidents, and NVAO, Vietnam's most respected NGO, said in

What's New In Adobe Photoshop 2021?

Bengal chief minister Mamata Banerjee today launched the much-awaited low-cost metro in Kolkata, saying it would ease traffic congestion. The metro will have a capacity of 4,500-5,000 passengers an hour, Banerjee told reporters at the first launch of the project at the number 46 Moulali crossing of the city. The project is expected to cost about Rs 85 crore, Rs 30 crore of which will come from the City Corporation and the balance from the state government. Banerjee said the metro would run on time as she had earlier asked the agency in charge to work with senior officers of the Kolkata Police so that the project could be completed within two years. The work is being executed by the Korean company Samsung, which has already completed work in Chennai and Kochi. "Kolkata, a serene and peaceful city of a million people, has no proper metro yet. The people would connect the entire New Town area and it will relieve traffic congestion. It will be another tourist attraction. "It will also reduce the time required to reach airport," she said. Banerjee said the first phase would be completed by December 2017, which would be followed by others. "I want a metro in all the districts and rail connectivity in all the blocks. The balance fund, including Rs 1,000 crore provided by the state government as development in lieu of tax on new homes, would be used," she said. "Metro connectivity in Kolkata will help in cutting traffic congestion. Kolkata is one of the most polluted cities but the city has everything, a city like London," she said.
