The Parabouche was designed and developed by a team led by Aurélien Dunand. Its design has been compared to that of the bidet. History The Parabouche was created by Aurélien Dunand and was introduced in September 2011. The Parabouche is sold by the French manufacturer Libérac (family business of J&J), and was developed in 2010. Libérac marketed the Parabouche as a novelty that is similar to a bidet, but more hygienic and easier to use. The first sales of the Parabouche were in France and its subsequent markets were in Germany, Spain and Japan. The Parabouche went through a major redesign in 2015, which resulted in a higher price. The new design is made by Libérac, but the brand name Parabouche is still used for commercial sales in Germany and Japan. In August 2016, Libérac launched a new and improved version of the Parabouche called the Parabouche Pro. Operating mechanism The Parabouche was designed to work like a bidet, but with a pressurized spray of water and a more sanitary reservoir. The Parabouche contains 2 reservoirs: the first is the bidet's bowl, and the second is the reservoir which collects and collects dirty water that has been used during washing. A micro-switch informs the user when it is time to rinse, or when the Parabouche is full of dirty water. The Parabouche can be switched on, using the water supply pipe, and can be manually turned off by pressing the button at the back of the appliance. User interface The Parabouche is fitted with a soft, oval shaped control panel in which the user can switch the Parabouche on and off. There are three buttons on the control panel, as well as 3 indicators, including the indicator of the water pressure and the indicator of the dirty water level. The Parabouche's functions can be programmed using the "Parabouche Genius" smartphone application. The Parabouche Genius application allows the user to make their Parabouche to automatically flush or rinse 54b84cb42d
