KeyMacro is a web-based development tool for creating interactive forms. It allows you to create forms that include fields for input and for validation. Also, it provides various functions for improving form field appearance. Fields that can be used for validation are radio buttons, check boxes, text boxes, image upload fields, and file upload fields. The number of validation functions available, and the options that you can use to provide for your users, are the same as those provided by other validation tools, such as validation JavaScript and validation services. In addition to validation, KeyMacro provides for a number of different layout functions. These include border style and color for form fields, CSS styles for web page presentation, support for browsers that don't support JavaScript, and display of additional information. You can apply any of the available CSS styles to form fields and button items. KeyMacro also provides for form field grouping. By grouping several fields into a single field, you can present a single data entry form to your users. For example, you can group several name, address, and telephone fields into a single form entry field. This field can be disabled. When a user tries to submit the form, any missing data will be defaulted to the previous value of the grouped fields. Another use of grouping fields is to create a form entry field. Grouping two fields into a single entry field forces users to enter data for both fields before they can submit the form. You can design a form to include two or more groups. Within a group, you can present any of the field types that KeyMacro supports. Fields are organized into sections. You can use the section break feature to provide a visual indication for your users. Validation and layout functions are available in forms that are created within the context of a web page. The data validation methods can be applied to fields that are accessible to the user. You can designate individual fields for validation by applying a validation class to them. Fields can be validated in the HTML page, in the form of the page, or in both ways. Once you have created a form, you can link it to any web page. Also, you can create a form to use on any web site.
