Read as much as you can and as quickly as you can. The less you struggle through information, the faster you can learn. One thing I have noticed on my own learning journey (be it about this blog, or anything else for that matter) is that it takes much longer to get up to speed than I thought it would. This is because you really need to practice what you have read. Most of us, or at least most readers who have a blog of their own, probably have read lots of books. We have learn the material we read by practicing a lot, trying out examples and ideas in it. We probably also are on the path of self-teaching. No matter what level of knowledge you have, you can always do better. Self-teaching is not just a path to learning on your own. It's really about using all of the resources available to you. Books, learning sites, online friends (and enemies), your own experience, and more. Before you go on to read more books, try this exercises and things to keep in mind. Be sure to come back and write on your blog about it later. Know your own learning process Learning is a process. We learn in different ways. We can learn lots of different things and you will do that based on who you are and what you are trying to learn. How do you learn? Take some time to think about this. If you are learning to program, how do you learn? Do you learn by reading lots of books 09e8f5149f
