Vox.com Vox.com is a technology blog focused on news, trends and the intersection between high-tech and its effect on all of our lives. The site publishes daily, thousands of original articles written by a team of journalists and researchers. The editorial mix includes long, by-the-numbers analysis on news and trends, explanatory links, interviews with experts in the fields, polling, comment, and a selection of our own original reporting on technology's effect on our lives. Vox.com was founded in 2015 by the staff of Vox Media, the American digital media and technology company. History Some media personalities see Vox.com as a competitor, a response to former tech publisher Gizmodo. Some of Vox's founders are formerly Gizmodo staff, including senior editor Alex Abad-Santos. Former California Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger started a satirical and more conservative successor to Vox called Real Clear Politics on June 27, 2017 with the intention of running it as a subscription-based for-profit video and multimedia company. Publications Vox.com publishes news, commentary, technical analysis, and analysis of the impact of new technologies and the effect of technology on a range of topics on a daily basis, spanning news, technology, business, science, and politics. Examples of the authors' topics include artificial intelligence, nuclear energy, robotics, genetics
