While we both really like the spring and early summer weather, we'd like to be able to get some more work done in the summer. During the spring, I know that I tend to be extra busy with gardening, so this is the time that I have to get it done. When it gets hot, I tend to be less inclined to get things done. So The Dude and I have come up with a plan. I will attempt to garden during the most pleasant part of the day. At first, I'm going to attempt to get planting and other outdoor chores done between noon and 5 p.m. He and I then want to start cooking up some of our garden vegetables, which means harvesting them. We'll only be harvesting the ones we can use right away. After that, I want to be able to leave things to grow, and by September, we'll have plenty to eat. We're going to start with tomatoes, peppers, and beans. I don't think that The Dude and I will be able to be as efficient at watering and weeding in the heat, so we'll have to buy a lot of supplies. We've talked about potentially using an existing raised bed system, with one row planted with peas, and the rest of the bed for tomatoes and peppers. We'll start our business in July, and then raise funds to be our own business in
