A: That's a valid HTML5 syntax and HTML5 is the default (canonical) way to use HTML in many browsers nowadays. If you have pages created with HTML4 then you need to use this doctype: This basically means HTML 5. So in your case you need to change the doctype to: Or alternatively make sure you use a valid doctype (like the one above). And if the old documentation is broken, check if there's a new one available. A: The version you are trying to edit is from long ago. This technology was introduced in version 2.1 and seems to have been dropped in version 2.2. You should consider downloading the new version 2.4, which is the current stable version, and it supports the use of HTML5 in iShow software. There is also a previous version which is compatible to HTML5 but it is included in iShow 2.3, which you are trying to edit so you have to put an exception in the settings of the software. Covalent binding of mutagens in formaldehyde-treated tissues. The teratogenic effects of formaldehyde and some formaldehyde-related compounds were reviewed. Formaldehyde and other methylating agents are capable of covalent binding to DNA and proteins and it is hypothesized that the teratogenicity of these agents is due to their capacity to cause mutations and impair the expression of gene products. Studies of the mechanism of formaldehyde teratogenicity are complicated by its low, enzymatic inactivation, systemic toxicity and the necessity to administer the agent on a daily basis. Recent work from this laboratory has shown that formaldehyde-induced mutations in vivo are due to the alkylation of DNA. The importance of the specific DNA sequence, the development and application of assays for mutations is discussed. A comparison of the covalent binding properties of a series of alkylating agents suggests that basic structural features of the alkylating agents and their reactive sites may have a similar role in covalent binding.Q: SQL: including the parent table when using ON with a LEFT JOIN Based on this topic SQL: LEFT JOIN including child records for each parent record I want to do this with a LEFT JOIN, because the tables I 82138339de
