You're wrong. This real-life city of Arabia is behind the scenes, transforming itself into a world-class hub for business, commerce, and trade." The company, which is owned by Africa Oil, said the project, dubbed Dhiraq I, will be built in two phases, with a first phase with a capacity of 45,000 barrels per day (bpd) and a second phase capacity of 55,000 bpd. Dubai, already the world's biggest oil importer, has been seeking to diversify its sources of crude and natural gas for its growing oil and gas demand. "We want to show how a country, a city can use its resources and manage its water well," Mohamed Al Jaber, the WEA's chief executive, said. "The areas in this area are some of the most productive agricultural areas and we hope to use this to bring more development to the region." Al Jaber said the Dhiraq I project would pave the way for other projects in the area and that the authority had identified other suitable sites in the region. The company is already the largest operator in the Red Sea by far, having discovered and developed more than 30,000 bpd of oil. It is also one of the leading operators in the Gulf of Aden, a body of water that separates the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aden. Masha Al Marri, Dubai's vice-chairman and chief executive, said the project would add to the sustainable
