The 26-year-old New Yorker drives a 2001 Nissan 240z turbo coupe. Arcidiacono writes in a guest post on Gizmodo that he likes his car because it can go anywhere and he can install whatever components he wants. The post was published Wednesday (and you can read it here). Arcidiacono details everything he's done to the car, including getting it a custom paint job, working on the audio and video system, and using "some custom parts, some tips from some friends and my instructor." Arcidiacono actually put the car together in high school. It was a purple Nissan Sentra, and the only thing he did to it was install carbon fiber seat covers. Arcidiacono's 240z now comes with 7.2-in. of wheel. "This might be the smallest wheels on a car," he writes. He writes that he only needs a small part of his 240z for most of his daily driving, even though "it gets to snow a lot." He mentions that he can make a trip from his home to New York on "well under 30 minutes." "My city to campus? A little over 40 minutes," he says. Arcidiacono's post is the first part of an ongoing series he plans to publish on Gizmodo. The effect of age on the pharmacokinetics of fentanyl in healthy subjects and cancer patients.
