Inappropriate or missed communication is a frequent problem in health-care institutions. The quality of communication between health-care professionals and patients is affected by the communication skills of each professional involved. To identify the frequency of communication errors between health-care professionals and patients in cardiology and internal medicine wards and to investigate the effect of communication training on this frequency. A multidisciplinary prospective study of the two wards of cardiology and internal medicine of our hospital was conducted from November 2011 to April 2012. Participants consisted of all professionals involved in medical care for patients in the cardiology and internal medicine wards. Data were recorded on communication errors between health-care professionals and patients, as well as the effects of an intervention in the form of a communication skills training workshop on this frequency. In total, 856 interactions involving 89 health-care professionals were recorded. The most common communication errors were omissions (26.3%) and interruptions (21.7%). The least common errors were unclarified statements (6.3%) and misinterpretations (1.5%). Our communication skills training workshop decreased the frequency of communication errors significantly ($F = 5.267$, $P = 0.02$). As a result of our workshop, omissions were reduced by 5.1%, unclarified statements by 2.4% and interruptions by 3.9%. Communication training should be provided to health-care professionals in an effort to improve communication between professionals and patients.Q: While adding JAR's to android project getting error'module not found' While adding a JAR into my android project, I am getting this error.
