The clipboard can be the most efficient and the most helpful method to transfer information between computer programs and websites. For example, you can use it to save someone's e-mail address on your clipboard just once and then copy it to an application that requires it. While a lot of programs still lack the ability to extract data from the clipboard, one of the best software programs of this kind is ClipboardMemo. This software works in your browser just like a normal clipboard so all you have to do is copy any piece of text and paste it in a website to get it to work. This can save you a lot of time because you can quickly copy and paste any piece of data from one application to another. More features

One of the coolest features of ClipboardMemo is its ability to save your favorite websites. You can do this by going into the web browser's address bar and pasting the name of the website you want to save into the ClipboardMemo search box. You can also set up reminders and email alerts so you don't forget the websites you want to save, and you can quickly add sites to your search list for easy access. One other cool feature in ClipboardMemo is the automatic updating of the database. This means that you can set up a new website, and then use the clipboard to keep that information in your database. You could even set up your calendar to automatically add a note to remind you when you need to visit that website again. One final aspect of this software that is worth mentioning is its excellent readability. You can use the CTRL + SHIFT + D combination to instantly bring up the database window so you can see all of the sites you saved in the clipboard. Key Features:
