the national party's commitment to tax cuts as an economic growth stimulus. The Coalition and Labor have both come out this week confirming tax cuts will be a key objective in their respective budgets. And that has huge implications for Australia's regional cities. The new ABS figures on the share of total private income going to the major cities clearly show the national picture is different than the city context. Adelaide, Perth, Darwin, Hobart, Canberra and

Brisbane all have a higher share of total private income going to the cities than NSW, Victoria and SA. And the pattern is different in jobs growth than in income. In NSW, Victoria, South Australia and Western Australia, the share of total new jobs going to regional cities is below the national average. Over the last four years, the rate of growth of new jobs in regional Australia was 2.6 per cent compared to 4.2 per cent nationwide.
