* Learn more about Photoshop from the Basics page. ## Desktop Publishing Desktop publishing (DTP) can be difficult to explain since the definition of desktop publishing varies. The term also encompasses a number of sub-branches, including: letterpress, preflight, printing, layout, page design, and graphic arts. Though by no means an exhaustive list of DTP applications, this book's primary DTP application is Adobe InDesign. You might think of Adobe InDesign as having three primary parts: the `_toolbar_` (also known as the `_menu bar_` or `_main menu_`) that allows the user to access the various functions, a `_palette_` (a collection of colors) that allows you to change colors, and the layout and design features that enable you to create layouts. This textbook uses the program to teach and to practice in all its facets. The following list describes various parts of Adobe InDesign: InDesign toolbar: The toolbar provides access to most of the InDesign features. Rulers: Set design rules and check your layout for accuracy. Guides: Guides and text settings make the text look just right. Text Options: Fonts, size, color, and other text options. Navigation: Display and edit pages of a document. Page Setup: Set the size, orientation, and margins of a page. Orientation: This enables you to view your layout in landscape or portrait mode. Page Layout: The tools for laying out a page in InDesign. Layout & Design: You can easily view the main design features of a page and edit the text or artwork. InDesign User Guide: This is a comprehensive guide for the InDesign version you are using. It is not the same for all version changes, so make sure you get the correct version if you don't know how to use your version of InDesign. Color: This refers to the colors of the artwork and colors used in a layout. Index: This helps you to see which pages should be displayed when using the Pages feature. Other Items: Fax, Stencil, and Style button. These are typically not needed. The left side of the toolbars provides access to the most commonly used functions.

Q: Refreshing data on UITableView without reloading the whole table I have a tableView that is populated with data when an activity gets created. When the user types a new text in the searchBar and taps on a place, the updated data is fetched from a server and the entire tableView needs to be reloaded. This is how I can achieve it: // Register for the edit text textDidChange event editSearch.addTarget(self, action: #selector(self.textDidChange(_:)), for:.editingChanged) func textDidChange(_ text: UITextField) { // Search for the last row in the tableView with the correct objectId let lastIndex = tableView.indexPathsForSelectedItems?.last?.row ?? NSNotFound guard let lastRow = tableView.indexPathsForSelectedRows?.last else { return } let lastObjectId: Int? = objects[lastRow.row].objectId let query = "SELECT * from devices WHERE objectId=\(lastObjectId!)" // Look for new search text let searchText = text.text ?? "" // Fetch the new data from the server, update the table and reload the table let fetchedObjects = fetchObjects(query: query, searchText: searchText) objects = fetchedObjects.allObjects as! [Object] objects.forEach { object in objects[object.objectId] = object self.tableView.reloadData() } } This works fine for small datasets, but for massive ones, it takes a long time and is not very efficient. Any workaround for this? A: Your solution is not efficient because you are getting the results in batches and then re-displaying the entire data set. I am not a Swift developer but a link to this question might help you. As for the performance problem, you can give your local DB a database ID. And there you are! You have the data you need for the local store and you can just call fetch

A police officer has been given an indefinite suspension for allegedly making an offensive comment about rugby players to a female colleague. Gareth J Evans, 49, was stopped by the woman on July 26, 2010, while on duty and while in uniform in Kilkenny, Ireland. He is alleged to have made comments about the physical appearance of the officer in question which were found to be inappropriate. He subsequently challenged the veracity of the woman's complaint but was unsuccessful. Read More A Special Court of Inquiry (SCOI) hearing was held between the complainant, her solicitor and the accused on Monday in Kilkenny. Gareth J Evans and his solicitor during the SCOI (Image: Google Maps) The Irish Independent reports the hearing was told that all allegations made by the complainant against Mr Evans were "categorically untrue" and that he had made "a number of inaccurate allegations against her". The court heard there was no evidence of any racist or sexist behaviour or language between the two. The officer also denied the existence of a form of police bullying known as "kissing a pig". Read More The hearing was told that the complainant was asked to give evidence at the SCOI but has since been refused permission to do so by the State Service. Jurors were told this would be the final opportunity to hear evidence and that as it would have been accepted that the complaint was 100 per cent unfounded, the charges would be withdrawn. Gareth J Evans at the SCOI (Image: Sean Carson) The court was also told that the case against Mr Evans would be withdrawn as it was the State's position that the officer had been "presented in a most favourable light by the witness" and therefore there was no case to answer. Jurors were told a decision in the case could have cost implications for Mr Evans, however they were not informed of the allegations made against him. A spokesperson for the court said they received no instructions at any time regarding the matter.Q: Why can't I see the svn browser? I just installed svn on a server.
