Back then, none of my school friends really understood me and just looked at me as someone who took photographs. So, I guess, I'd like to think that I'm just as un-understandable as I was back then. As for my photography? Well, I've been greatly inspired by the photographer JR, who's done an incredible job capturing each of our dining experiences. I mean, he's basically changed how I think about food. (Side note: I'm using the term 'food' loosely here. More on that later.) Back to the point.

When I ordered my steak, I didn't know what to expect. And then I ordered my kale, only to find out that I can't eat it. Which is actually a really good thing, because I'm not really sure I'd like it. And then, when the check arrived, I found out that I'd just paid $24 for an 'artisanal' sandwich. And this 'artisanal' sandwich. I guess they're actually called sandwiches. Who knew? Anyway, JR's doing a little project on his camera. He's been shooting food at every restaurant we've been to, for me to play around with on Instagram. All of the pictures have a special filter, and I've been finding the easiest way to post my pictures is through the filters. So, I've been going through the 90's vibe, which is already a little bit annoying. (Honestly, I don't even understand why I have to change my filters once it's already been applied.) Anyway, as for the food that we've been eating? This lunch left a bad taste in my mouth. Chef Amos Lombardi is from Brooklyn.
