Billy was a 33-year-old Icelandic PhD student in Norse literature. He was working on the Germanic roots of the Icelandic language, specifically his multidisciplinary research into the history of modern Icelandic language grammar. He lived in the town of Hafnarfjörður in the north of Iceland. He was a thoughtful, articulate, and well-educated young man. Billy was diagnosed with a brain tumor. It was surgically removed by a very prominent Icelandic neurosurgeon, who at first seemed confident of a full recovery. However, within six weeks the doctor had to let him go to Australia for treatment for a different cancer. Unfortunately, the cancer had metastasized to his brain and he died in Australia. No one knew how he died. Billy's family, particularly his brother, were devastated by his death. His mother in particular, after many doubts about his fitness to remain and carry on with his studies, became convinced that he was still alive in Australia and that it was a big mistake for him to have left Iceland. She went to the Australian embassy in Iceland and obtained travel documents. Her son was declared dead by the Icelandic doctors, and she left for Australia. After arrival she lodged a claim for $100,000 from the Australian government for her son's care. An Australian magistrate, however, refused her request, ruling that the Australian government cannot be held responsible for the actions of foreign nationals abroad. Ms. Ragnarsdóttir is appealing to the Supreme Court of Australia. What will happen to 3da54e8ca3
