❏ Create an Account for free. ❏ You can also login to it, but you don't get any free-of-charge service if you don't create an account first. ❏ The web client is compatible with the latest versions of the Internet Explorer, Opera, Chrome, and Mozilla Firefox. ❏ The software client is compatible with the last versions of Mac OS X and Windows 7, Vista, XP, 2000, and Win95 ❏ Use both client options. ❏ Our servers can be accessed from anywhere in the world. ❏ A range of RDP client is also available. Lofa's Solution For NetSript Program Since we have two options (generally) and it's up to the user which they feel is the best option, it was difficult for me to think this wouldn't be a problem. We also need to pay attention to what happens if the software is not fully compatible with the remote client in use. Is there an issue with scripting or the way the client connects to the remote desktop environment? I've done a bit of research and think I may have found an answer. The client runs on the remote desktop platform directly. That means that it can handle scripting etc... I've spoken to the developer of the client and he says that the php enabled remote desktop is the only one that runs on the remote client. We therefore assume that the script will work. If you look at the php site, it also states the following: PHP is a scripting language designed for web development. It is a relatively easy language to learn and it is an excellent general purpose language. When written in PHP, a web page can be dynamically generated and often requires very little server support. Because PHP is a server-side scripting language, it can easily manipulate data before passing it to an HTML page or another PHP script via the POST method. It is also capable of dynamically creating web pages and other information from user input via a web form. Does this mean that the php enabled remote desktop client is the only one that can handle scripting etc...? The FreePBX site states the following: Installation You will find the following installation guide on the FreePBX Wiki.
