Last week, the city hit the headlines when it introduced a new policy to keep some of its garden residents at the Hamburg zoo. Until now, it was legal to keep dozens of monkeys in a back garden on the Elbe, but the animal lovers argued that taking the monkeys' freedom was unacceptable. So last year, the city started looking for another place to keep them. They are now living on the grounds of Hamburg's zoo, which is already home to several ape species. In fact, 25 monkeys now live on the grounds of the zoo, and over the next few months they are going to be gradually integrated into the "monkey garden" in different stages. The plan is to let the animals live their lives in the garden, but, at the same time, visitors will be able to keep an eye on them through large video displays. "If you are able to look into the forest, we can do it here, too," said Frank Möller of the Hamburg zoo. One monkey lives in a large outdoor cage, while three others live in large concrete enclosures. There is also a tree house for three individuals. The city expects that the animals will form friendships and socialise, while, in the future, it also wants to give them some more space. Visitors will be able to keep an eye on them, since the main garden will be equipped with four new-generation video displays which will be switched on by motion detectors. However, the current displays are made with "second-generation" technology, which are already obsolete. Mayor Olaf Scholz was at the zoo on Wednesday to unveil the video displays. The mayor said he was happy that the Hamburg zoological society decided to bring the monkeys to the zoo grounds. "It is a step in the right direction," he said. "The zoo is still not a real habitat for the monkeys. I hope that they will be happy here and will be able to live a happy life."Q: Does it matter if I make a backbone view reusable? So, my question is: If I'm going to be creating a Backbone view, is it a big deal to make it reusable? For example: say I make a ContactForm view that is "ContactForm.h

How Cliptonomy Stacks Up Cliptonomy is a desktop application with multiple clipboard slots. The application comes in an .NET Framework-compatible version. It requires a minimum of .NET Framework 4.0, and you can't use it on earlier versions. The most recent version of Cliptonomy is 1.2.2.3. Cliptonomy has a compatible setup that allows you to transfer it to most devices. Moreover, the application comes with a portable version, but it requires the .NET Framework. The application runs as a portable application, with no installer required. The application comes with a number of different types of transfers, each of which is displayed in the main window. Some of the types of clipboard transfers in Cliptonomy include both .NET Framework and portable versions. For instance, there is a third party keyboard. You can also use the clipboard to cut and paste different files, or even to cut and paste the clipboard itself. Cliptonomy comes with a configuration window, allowing you to setup which sort of transfers you want to use, and which sort of files you want to use. What's In the Box? By default, the setup includes your most recent changes. The application includes two clipboard transfers that can be accessed from the main menu. On the main menu, there's an "Other" section with a large number of transfers, accessible via a shortcut. Cliptonomy includes a couple of key shortcuts, which allow you to navigate within the main window, and to make it display various types of files. These include a reverse-direction key, a combined modifier key, and a context menu key. The application also includes a couple of hotkeys, which include a four-fingered swipe gesture, and a double-click. Cliptonomy's main window has a large number of functions, including a simple clip area, where you can enter clips and copy them to one of the clipboard transfers, and a context menu with functions for file transfers. What to Consider It takes a while to get through the setup. Most users will
