However, the results of the present study using the brainstem nuclei of rats showed no significant change in the number of neurons in the facial nucleus following CTX administration, which is consistent with the absence of facial nerve impairment. The results of the present study indicated that the axons of the facial nerve grow through the brainstem nuclei and that the axons are resistant to neurotoxic insult. Globus Pallidus Nucleus {#sec2_9} ----- Following CTX administration, a reduction in the number of neurons in the globus pallidus was observed in rats compared to that of the normal control group. The results of the present study are consistent with the results of other studies investigating the effects of neurotoxic insult on the globus pallidus. It has been suggested that the globus pallidus can be a suitable structure for cell transplantation following neurotoxic damage. Our results support this suggestion. Limbic System {#sec2_10} ----- The results of the present study indicated that CTX caused a significant reduction in the number of neurons in the hippocampal formation, although it did not affect the number of neurons in the dentate gyrus. These results are consistent with other studies that used neurotoxic insult to evaluate the effects of CTX on the limbic system. Although CTX is known to be highly selective for the retinal gangl
