Q: how to get network status in android I have 2 apps that do the same things. One is an app which just display some stuff and other one displays a lot of info about the network state and network speed. the only difference that they display different amount of info, is that the second one i call from another application. I would like to know if there is a way to figure out the network state (and speed), like the first app does to know if the connection is good or not. I have read all post about this subject, i have used `getSocketTimeuse()` but it isn't what i want, i want to get the network state, is it possible? Thanks.

A: You can't directly from an android device. According to this source you need to use a "logic analyzer". Here's an example code that checks if a file was sent successfully through a socket:

public boolean send(String path){ boolean ret = false; try { FileOutputStream f = new FileOutputStream(path); ret = socket.send(f); } catch (IOException e) { Toast.makeText(this, "Unable to send file.", Toast.LENGTH_LONG).show(); e.printStackTrace(); } return ret; }

And you need to write a logic analyzer that runs in another app on your device. Then you can look at the socket if you want the file sent. Over the weekend, we saw several reports that a 13-inch MacBook Pro has been spotted in the wild, and an eagle-eyed user going by the Twitter handle @nosuchthing found
