Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a facsimile apparatus. More particularly, the present invention relates to a facsimile apparatus capable of receiving a multi-phase image that has been coded in the MF (Modified Frequency) manner. 2. Description of the Prior Art In the facsimile apparatus which has heretofore been available in the prior art, a conversation scheme in which a full-time conversation is carried out between a calling side and a called side and a conversation scheme in which a shortened conversation is carried out between the calling side and the called side have been adopted as the conversation schemes for the facsimile apparatus. In the full-time conversation scheme, a transmission side stores image data from a document (e.g. a document that has been transmitted by a telephone call) in a memory. The transmission side then executes image processing for a document having no black on a white background such as a picture so as to generate image data to be sent to a called side. Also, in the shortened conversation scheme, a transmission side stores image data from a document in a memory. The transmission side then generates image data to be sent to a called side. The transmission side decodes the received image data to restore the original form of the document image as much as possible. In the prior art, in the above-mentioned facsimile apparatus of the prior art, the following arrangement has been adopted as an arrangement for transmitting multi-phase image data by means of the full-time conversation scheme. For example, there has been proposed an arrangement in which a document image which has been compressed and coded to undergo compression in the two-phase coding scheme is transmitted to a called side as multi-phase image data. In this manner, in the prior art, it is not possible to distinguish, in the case where a document having
