Prevalence and risk factors for gastric cancer in Chinese patients with type 2 diabetes. We aimed to determine the prevalence and risk factors for gastric cancer (GC) among type 2 diabetes (T2DM) patients in China. At a hospital in Beijing, China, 2534 adult patients with T2DM were interviewed and underwent an endoscopy with biopsy. At that time, they also submitted a blood sample. A standardized questionnaire was used to collect information on demographic factors and personal and family histories. Of the 2534 T2DM patients, 862 (34.3%) were found to have gastritis and 791 (31.6%) had GC. The prevalence of GC was 33.4% (29.7% males and 39.0% females), the mean age of GC cases was 59.3 ± 10.1 years, the prevalence of GC was significantly lower in women than men ($\chi^2 = 4.7$, $P = 0.03$). GC in T2DM patients is common in China. There are gender differences in the prevalence of GC among T2DM patients. We recommend endoscopic follow-up be performed for T2DM patients and, for those found to have gastritis, that they be screened for GC. To prevent GC among T2DM patients, we should focus on relevant factors such as sex and drinking
