Solanastrum is a genus of annual herbs in the carrot family (Apiaceae) known generally as witchweeds, herb-of-blood, or heart-in-hand. It is distributed throughout the world. Many species are known to be poisonous, though some use is made of some of the milder species as a spice, for example, in Ethiopian cuisine. One species, Solanum indicum, is used to treat hypertension. There is no special committee of the International Union for Conservation of Nature to assess the conservation status of these plants. A few are endangered in their native habitats. However, they are often grown as ornamental plants and many are cultivated as annual or biennial herbs in temperate regions. In some countries, the plant kingdom includes many poisonous species, but none of the species has been domesticated for food. Some species are called "herb-of-blood" or "witchweed" because they turn red when bruised. Selected species Solanum americanum
