Ultrasonic method permits to evaluate the diaphragmatic movement. In 48 young subjects, 15 healthy and 33 suffering from different organic diseases, we have studied diaphragmatic movements during inspiration and expiration. Two series of transversal scans of the lower abdomen and thorax were performed, one in the seated position and another in the supine one. The observed path was the trace of the diaphragm corresponding to an axis of x and y, coordinates of a man operating a mouse. The lower position of the diaphragm in the supine position was due to higher mediolateral and ventral displacement of the diaphragm in the supine position. The normal values of the diaphragmatic movement in the seated position are closer to those found in normal subjects than the supine ones. Compensatory movements in different organic diseases were not always correlated with those changes observed in healthy persons. In conclusion, the study of diaphragmatic movements by ultrasonic method can be useful to evaluate the respiratory function. Last week, a vaguely threatening 3-year-old tweet from Donald Trump that said "Muslims hate us!" sparked a flurry of outrage, including a boycott of the Trump brand. The White House called the tweet "unacceptable" and "offensive." The campaign's co-chair David Bossie apologized and Fox News host Megyn Kelly called Trump's comments "deeply offensive and absolutely unacceptable." Well, so what else is new? America is a big country, with lots of different people, and lots of different cultures. Big deal. But that's not how Donald Trump sees it. Trump is really mad because the Obama administration has expressed concerns about anti-Muslim hate crimes in the wake of last Friday's terrorist attacks in Paris. Trump's social media statements leave no doubt that he takes that concern very personally. "It's a sad day in America when the Obama administration apologizes for our country," Trump tweeted Wednesday. "They are ashamed of our country! Is there any group that Obama hates more than Muslims? They will come after us. I say, 'Come on!'" f30f4ceada
