Tip The handy Photoshop Guide (on), and other online tutorials, help with the complicated workflows you're likely to encounter when working in the editor. * **
Adjustment layers. Photoshop's layers add a whole new dimension to picture editing. Although you could do some of these types of manipulations in layers of the original image, often you'll get better results by first creating a separate image for the adjustment, and then creating an adjustment layer in Photoshop to apply the effects to the original image. This creates a nifty, "floating" layer that updates automatically when you change the original image. There are a wide variety of built-in adjustment layers for things like Levels, Curves, Brightness/Contrast, Blur, and many more. * **
Filter effects. Photoshop has some beautiful filters (little helpers that enable you to create effects). You can use some of these filters inside an adjustment layer, or you can leave the image with the adjustment layer and then add an Adjustment Layer mask to the adjustment layer, and then apply the filters to the _masked_ image (the underlying layer). You can also use filters in the Layers dialog. *

The agricultural sector in Ethiopia is one of the most dynamic sectors of the economy and represents a growth engine for the country. The sector employs more than 12 million people and generates gross value added (GVA) of US$8 billion in 2014. The macroeconomic situation in the sector is characterized by low growth, inflation and high levels of non-performing loans (NPL). To address these issues, the Ministry of Agriculture, Water and Natural Resources (MoAWNR) has established a new mandate, in its 2018/2019 annual budget, to undertake ambitious reform. The reform targets include domestic legislation changes and international best practices, in order to strengthen the support mechanism and improve the access of the agri-food sector to credit markets. The assumption of this study is that the reform agenda from the MoAWNR is successful and that the agriculture sector starts a new growth phase. Therefore, a principal-agent model is used for the government-farmer relations. The goal is to determine the farmer's reaction to government reforms and establish what characteristics encourage farmers to participate in the reform agenda. The objective of this paper is to develop a decomposition model for the panel of sub-Saharan countries of the African Union, in which agriculture and related services are included in the scope of analysis. For doing so, it is assumed that agriculture is the most important sector of the economy. The primary purpose of the study is to evaluate the impact of the lower subsidies in the long run. The study contributes to the literature by developing new econometric approaches to analyze the panel and confirms the importance of the more innovative technologies for the dynamic strategy for the region. The Ethiopian construction sector is the second-largest sector in the Ethiopian economy. The sector has grown consistently over the past few decades, but the current aggregate construction expenditure level is around 15 percent of GDP. According to the recent World Bank survey, annual GDP growth is expected to be about 4 percent over the next decade. This paper examines the impact of interest rates on the demand for loans and the household saving behavior in Ethiopia. It is found that a 10 percent decline in the rate does not affect the demand for loans or savings. On the other hand, a 10 percent increase in the rate will increase the demand for bank loans and reduce the saving behavior by households in Ethiopia. A steady growth rate of agriculture sector is an important ingredient for the achievement of food security in Ethiopia. The Ethiopian government has always emphasized the policy of agricultural development as the main pillar to support the economic growth.
