Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an image pickup apparatus for scanning a light beam with respect to a photographic image plane for detecting light, such as reflected light, scattered light, and diffused light reflected from an image on the image plane, for image pickup, and to an image pickup method. More particularly, the invention relates to an image pickup apparatus and an image pickup method for detecting a light amount distribution on a plane as light distribution information. 2. Description of the Related Art For example, in an image pickup apparatus for reading an original image, a light beam is irradiated on the original image through a slit, a half-mirror or the like, and the reflected light or the like from the original image is detected as a light amount distribution on a two-dimensional plane. The light amount distribution is image-processed, thereby reproducing the original image. For example, there has been known a digital copying machine for reading an original image with an image sensor having a plurality of light receiving elements such as CCDs for converting the light amount distribution of the original image to an electric signal, amplifying the resultant signal, and converting the amplified signal to a density signal. In general, the light amount distribution on an image plane is detected with a large number of pixels. More specifically, in a digital copying machine, the number of pixels is as large as about 8,000,000 to 16,000,000. For example, in the digital copying machine, the light amount distribution is detected with the light receiving elements corresponding to each of the pixels. More specifically, in the digital copying machine, a light amount distribution detecting device scans the original image by moving the scanning position thereof,
