A 44-year-old female with a past history of smoking presented to the hospital with acute chest pain. The radiograph of the chest revealed an acute aortic syndrome. An emergency aortic surgery was performed. The chest radiograph of the patient at the time of the operation showed enlargement of the heart and the left heart border was at the upper limit of the sternum. Surgical findings showed a type A aortic dissection. For further evaluation of the internal cardiac anatomy, we investigated the heart in detail using the cardiac angiography, computed tomography and magnetic resonance imaging. We conclude that a type A aortic dissection is not always accompanied by enlargement of the heart. This type of aortic dissection is considered to be followed by growth of the coronary arteries and enlargement of the heart in spite of the aortic dissection. Nephrology in sub-Saharan Africa: the first steps. Nephrology is an area of medicine which, in most industrialized countries, plays a major role in the diagnosis and treatment of patients with renal failure. There are, however, considerable geographical and socioeconomic variations in access to specialist services. The
