Tip Most web servers are configured to automatically convert JPEG files to GIF and other formats. If the server isn't configured in this way, consult your host's documentation. The Automatic Conversion setting makes files compatible with your web browser's GIF or JPEG format. Here's how you make the change (File> Automate Conversion): 1. **Choose Photoshop Elements** → **Image Processor** → **Convert to...**. In this dialog box, you can select the format to which you want to convert the file. JPEG is the native format for the web and for most print documents. TIFF is the standard format for print documents and most commercially produced photos. You can also use PSD. In this instance, the web server would interpret the PSD file as either a JPEG or TIFF. In this example, the setting has been changed to JPEG, meaning that the program will automatically convert any files uploaded to the web into the most appropriate format for the web browser: 2. **Choose a conversion option, as shown inFigure 2-22Bottom: Changing the Automatic Conversion setting to JPEG, so that it automatically converts file types to be ready for uploading to the web.** The conversion options depend on the file format you chose. If you selected JPEG, the conversion options are JPEG, TIFF, and PSD (File> Convert). If

All of the things said on the following pages apply to both versions. Contents: What is Photoshop Elements? See here for more on Photoshop Elements and the differences between the versions. Elements instead of Photoshop The main difference between Elements and the professional version is that Elements does not have a full version of Photoshop. The controls and options are simplified, the user interface is simpler, and more choices are available. The main advantage of Elements is the choice of licenses. You can buy Photoshop Elements and use it on 5 computers (for one license) or use it on 25 computers (for five licences). Photoshop has a perpetual license where you can use it on 25 computers. You can find out more about the differences on the pages about Photoshop and Elements. The name of the package and the version number Elements has its own name, Photoshop Elements. When you click it you get a page that will ask you for a printer, paper size, etc. Once you have chosen all your settings you will get a print ready to be taken to the printer. When you first open Elements the print menu is greyed out and you will only be able to print to PDF. The print menu will become available when you have created a Print Preview in the bottom bar. In the Print Preview you can drag the image to a new page. If you have more than one image in the same document you can select several and print them all at the same time. Sounds great! That's the last thing I need, but I appreciate the offer. I've actually been planning on designing something, but my online design software is kind of crappy. I'd love to have someone else step in and have someone else try to "get it right". I think this is going to be the easiest item to make. It's definitely in the Verve line, so I figure most of the parts will work with it. The tail should be easy. Really want to add something to the front of the thing... I'm trying to figure out what that would be. If I can get the zipper to stay, will I be able to fit the bp into the zipper? I'm assuming the tube will just slide in between. I don't want to have to make a new needle holder... guess I'll have to get creative. Monday I got the zipper pretty much done. Right before I started using it, I ran into a problem. I can't get the bp inside the zipper, even when I removed one of the rows so that it would be closer to the back. Other than that, I think it went real well. Tuesday I decided to add some metal beads to the front of the button as a cute little detail. I wasn't sure how to achieve it, so I ended up getting two buttons in the same color that I could interchange. I may keep one of them with just a safety pin to have a safety ring. Pretty sweet... if it doesn't turn to shit pretty quickly. Wednesday Falling flat. I tried to add a layer of thermal tape to hold the beads in place and it made things just fall apart. Looks ok to me. I almost pulled it off of there, but it's ok. I can take it off later... have to return it tomorrow for the travel size. Thursday How can this not look good? It came out great. I figured I'll get as many as possible in there... give it to someone I know. I figured I'd try to make a larger one. If I do anything with it, I'll post the pic. Friday The zipper got messed up again. It's not quite done yet, but I think it'll be ok.Suspense – Russian Spie-thriller Suspense – Russian Spie-thriller Susp
