Twist pinch sign predicts the need for tracheostomy in the management of childhood subglottic stenosis. To investigate the predictive value of the twisted-shoulder (Twist pinch) sign for the need for tracheostomy in the management of childhood subglottic stenosis (SCS). This prospective study evaluated the Twist pinch sign in adults and children with SCS and its use as a predictor of the need for tracheostomy. One hundred and twenty-eight SCS patients were included; 126 were managed with stents and the rest with tracheostomy. Children and adults were examined independently; (1) age at the time of the Twist pinch sign study, (2) age at the time of the management, and (3) the procedure used to manage the stenosis. The presence of the Twist pinch sign was associated with small infants (mean age 18 ± 14 days) with airway distention secondary to the presence of a tracheal stoma and/or adenoid hypertrophy. The Twist pinch sign was positive in 34 children (90% sensitivity), negative in 30 children (90% specificity) and was not present in seven children (negative predictive value = 85%). Positive Twist pinch sign was associated with older children (mean age 5.2 ± 3.5 years) with stenosis following multiple surgeries. The Twist pinch sign is more specific than sensitive for the need for tracheostomy in the management of SCS. The purpose of this study is to determine the role of the renin-angiotensin system (RAS) in the pathogenesis of chronic renal allograft injury and to determine the ability of RAS blockade to prevent or treat chronic allograft nephropathy. The circulating renin-angiotensin system (RAS) plays an important role in the regulation of the blood pressure and maintains a neuro-humoral balance in the body. Proteins for the RAS have been found in the kidneys. Angiotensinogen (AGT) is secreted mainly by the liver, and is converted to angiotensin I by the enzyme angiotensin-converting enzyme (ACE). Angiotensin-I (Ang-I) is the primary active product of the RAS and is capable of regulating blood pressure by acting on the renin-angiotensin-aldosterone system (RAAS) and the kiiin-kall
