It is developed with XHTML as the primary coding language. It’s open source. The site is built on PHP, Perl, and JavaScript. It was last updated in March 2007. The purpose of this site is to provide free fonts for web and print designs to everyone. The fonts are free for anyone to use and reproduce in any way. The creator of this site doesn't hold a copyright on the generated fonts. The author of this site only provides the code of the fonts in the public domain. Anyone can edit the fonts and package them in any way they like. All fonts were generated in the way we are accustomed to using a web-based font generator. When the font is finished, the code is added to an HTML file and the file is sent to the server. The tool provides the ability to generate a lot of fonts out of a given font (up to 100000). However, it's impossible to generate a font with all the stylistic properties exactly the same as the original one
