It is proposed that in the 5-HT-receptive raphe cells, the drug activates the 5-HT<sub>2</sub> receptors to modulate the electrical properties of the cell membrane, thereby altering the dynamics of the cell and changing the information flow through the cell. This will affect the nucleus accumbens, a major center of the 5-HT system and the nucleus of the 5-HT cell bodies in the dorsal raphe, an important source of descending 5-HT fibers. Using microelectrode recording techniques, the modulation of raphe cell activity by the drug will be measured in anesthetized rats in response to 5-HT or quipazine injection. The responses to 5-HT will also be measured in vitro to determine the role of 5-HT<sub>2</sub> receptors in modulating the excitability of the raphe cells. In parallel, the cocaine-induced changes in the nucleus accumbens cells will be studied to determine whether cocaine similarly alters the electrical properties of the cell, and the role of 5-HT<sub>2</sub> receptors in this response. The results from this proposal will elucidate the role of 5-HT in the action of cocaine, and may explain the observed reduction of cocaine's drug reinforcing effect in 5-HT-depleted animals. In addition, the results may suggest novel strategies for treating cocaine addiction, and may help elucidate the mechanism of action of cocaine and related drugs of abuse.
