In a 5-0 decision, the court said current Florida law doesn't provide these felons the right to vote until they have completed parole and probation. The court agreed with a circuit court judge who ruled against an initiative petition to change that law in 2018. The group leading the effort to get the initiative on the ballot said the decision would give thousands of former felons a chance to have a voice in the political process. But opponents said the law should be changed to restore the voting rights to all felons, rather than those on parole and probation. The court ruled to allow the campaign to put the measure on the 2018 ballot, but noted it will not go into effect unless the Legislature changes the law. Amendment 4 would allow people to vote who are now on parole or probation, 77a5ca646e
