There is proposed in Japanese Unexamined Patent Publication (Kokai) No. 2-226062 a technique in which a type of surface mounting module for mounting an integrated circuit chip in which an IC chip is encapsulated with a resin is obtained by encapsulating the periphery of a chip with a mold and thereafter pressing the top surface of the chip with a solidifying member and pressing the chip with an upper mold. According to this technique, the pattern of the upper mold is provided with sufficient venting regions so that an excess of molten resin is prevented from flowing back to the chip. In consequence, the chip is not exposed to a high temperature and is encapsulated in an ordinary temperature during molding. According to the above technique, however, since an excessively large amount of resin is required to fill up the mold cavity, it is necessary to have a pressure nozzle having a large diameter for applying the pressure. Consequently, when using a pressure nozzle having a large diameter, it is impossible to apply uniform pressure to the entire chip, and it is very difficult to encapsulate the chip in good reproducibility. In addition, since the injected resin is taken away by the force of a pressure applied by the pressure nozzle, it is impossible to apply an optimum pressure to the chip, and there is a possibility that the chip is not encapsulated in good reproducibility. Furthermore, since the surface of the resin becomes roughened by the pressure nozzle, a smooth mirror surface cannot be formed on the top surface of the chip, and therefore the top surface of the chip cannot be set in a correct position with respect to a mounting substrate. According to the surface mounting module obtained by encapsulating the chip with a resin and pressing the chip with an upper mold, the chip is likely to undergo a damage during mounting, especially when mounting by soldering.Q: How do I use values from one column in a regex match in another column in the same file?
