Saudi Arabia is now attempting to stymie their exit by forcing the U.S. government to delay or cancel one of the largest repatriation flights of U.S. citizens off the island of Yemen. On January 19, the U.S. consulate in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, announced that it would be closing until further notice. As a result, according to a notice published by the Saudi Ministry of the Interior, thousands of U.S. citizens holding valid U.S. passports will likely face additional delays in repatriation. The flight set to leave the Jeddah airport at 4:30 p.m. on January 20 had originally been scheduled to leave Saudi Arabia on January 12. But due to the change in schedule, the number of tickets available to passengers has been reduced by an estimated one-third. Saudi officials did not provide any explanation as to why the consulate decided to close on such short notice. The Guardian, citing a source, says that the decision was "a sign of the pressure the Saudi government is applying to the US government." To give you an idea just how much pressure the Saudi government is applying, it is reported that British Foreign Secretary Boris Johnson will be visiting the White House and will present U.S. President Donald Trump with a letter urging the U.S. government to "reverse its decision to allow [the repatriation flight] to take off." In December, the Trump administration announced that approximately 2,000 Americans would be repatriated by plane with U.S. airlines. The first flights were scheduled to depart Yemen on January 12 and were expected to carry several hundred Americans back to the U.S. Approximately 3,000 Americans are currently stranded in the country. While the United States has long provided logistical
