The rapid growth of the medical device industry may be particularly strong in the coming years. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, the health care industry directly employs a wide array of professionals, including physicians, laboratory technicians, nurses, and other healthcare occupations. In the academic community, health care professionals can pursue master's degrees in health care administration or health informatics, and bachelor's degrees in health science, public health, and other health-related fields. Some medical schools and universities offer specially designed programs in health care information technology. A recent college graduate may find employment as a computer programmer, information analyst, or in an administrative role. The graduate programs in health care management at a number of colleges and universities provide solid preparation for a
