Treatment of B-cell and plasma cell malignancies with rituximab: focus on refractory and relapsed multiple myeloma. Recent data suggest that rituximab can be safely given to patients with B-cell and plasma cell malignancies, including multiple myeloma. In this review, we examine the results of the most recent studies on the use of rituximab in multiple myeloma. As discussed in detail elsewhere in this issue, multidrug therapy has improved the complete response rates in patients with newly diagnosed multiple myeloma, and several single-agent regimens have been shown to be effective in this setting, including the combination of cyclophosphamide, thalidomide, and dexamethasone (CTd), which can prolong survival even in heavily pretreated patients with multiple myeloma. Preliminary data suggest that rituximab can have an impact on the clinical course of myeloma when given with standard therapy. As an example, three studies showed that rituximab can significantly prolong the duration of remission in multiple myeloma patients responding to CTd, in combination with autologous stem-cell transplantation and/or lenalidomide. Furthermore, as single-agent therapy, rituximab is highly effective as first-line therapy for myeloma patients with minimal or no prior therapy, and it is more effective than conventional therapy, including alkylating agents alone. Rituximab can also be used safely with standard therapy in the treatment of relapsed/refractory myeloma. The combination of rituximab plus the proteasome inhibitor bortezomib is highly active in relapsed and refractory myeloma, including patients treated previously with autologous stem-cell transplantation and/or thalidomide, even though the optimal use of this combination is yet to be clarified. Rituximab is now well recognized as an effective agent in the treatment of multiple myeloma, and its role will undoubtedly change over time.Care to share with your colleagues?
