Every President inaugurates a new term When the time comes to inaugurate a new term, the US Constitution requires that there be a president as well as vice-president, who is elected separately from the presidential candidate (that happens in a kind of primary) and also that there be a two-term limit. But these two functions can be served by different people! We may not like the idea, but that's a constitutional requirement that the Founders were determined to fix. In 1688 the monarchy was abolished and replaced with a republican form of government, but the monarchs still had the right to veto any and all legislation passed by Parliament. The problem arose in England when a problem of succession arose: who would be king after William III died? The only sensible solution was to hold a Parliament meeting to select a new monarch. No one could imagine that a President or King would be subject to such an obnoxious requirement! But the Founders were very conscious of the need for an orderly transfer of power and carefully designed the American system to allow for the President to serve two terms. Presidents were elected by popular vote and they often served for eight years. The reason for the limit was that the world was not yet ready for a president to be the leader of a world power. What the founding fathers really
