For the Southland, Queensland, see South Queensland. Southland (sometimes Southland Province or Southern Land; also known as Southland, South Queensland, South-Eastern Queensland or South-Eastern Land) is the southern portion of the Australian mainland. Geography Southland is bordered by the Coral Sea on the eastern side, by Queensland on the west, and by Victoria on the north. It is separated from the northern part of New South Wales by the Great Dividing Range. The most prominent feature of Southland is the Macintyre Ranges, which follow the east coast of New South Wales from south to north. The ranges have a great influence on the climate of the area, making the area rainforest-dense. The neighbouring provinces are: Western Australia to the north, New South Wales to the west, Queensland to the south and Victoria to the east. Sightseeing One of the popular attractions in Southland is Jardine's Lookout. The lookout looks out on Southward Bay and is located on Black Rock, an offshore coral formation, with a distance from Rockhampton. On the lookout's very summit is a glass-faced tower, which has a telescope for viewing. Jardine's Lookout was built in 1880 for William Jardine and was called "The Tower" for that reason. In 1909 the Queensland Government purchased the lookout and its machinery and it was renamed as the Black Rock Lookout. This lookout is one of the best in Queensland, and provides beautiful views of Mount Archer, Mount Boondooma and Mount Owen. River In the Southland area, the biggest river is the Mackenzie River. It is one of the biggest rivers in Southland. Southland is the largest, most sparsely populated and economically depressed of Australia's mainland regions. It is named after the southern portion of the state in which it resides, one of four mainland areas, another being Northern Land, another Northern Land, Northern Territory, and yet another North-Eastern Land.
