Consumables Editors use all kinds of tools to make marks on a page or canvas. Some editors like to make marks by hand. Others prefer a marker, crayon, or pencil. If you've ever used graph paper, you have used a ruler and scored the paper. Few editing tools are all that helpful or necessary. * Brush: The brush tool is best suited for creating highlights or filling in areas of an image. Photoshop's brush is similar to a painter's paintbrush. * Chalk: The chalk tool can be used to fill in an image with chalk marks for texture. * Eraser: The eraser tool does the job of erasing (or removing) marks on your page or canvas. The eraser comes in all kinds of shapes and sizes. * Highlighter: The highlighter tool lets you mark areas on your canvas that are more important. * Marker: The pen tool, which can create any type of graphic, is available with Photoshop's many layers and layers of image manipulation, where changes are made one at a time. * Pencil: Photoshop has a number of pencil tools, including a pen and pencil, dot, straight, and other tools. With these tools you can make marks on your canvas, drag, and draw using a variety of shapes, depending on what you're drawing. * Ruler: Photoshop's ruler lets you make sure that the edges of the canvas line up perfectly. * Stamp: Stamp tools come in many shapes, including circle, square, and star. With these tools you can draw shapes on the canvas and then stamp them into the photo. * Spray: Photoshop has a spray tool that lets you sprays objects that you draw and create to put them in your image. * Spot: Photoshop's spot tool lets you put a specific area of your image in a brighter or lighter tone, depending on what you want to do with the image. Many editors like to use different tools to create different marks or shapes in an image. Table 1-3 defines the various tools available in Photoshop and lists how to use the tools. Table 1-

A happy couple in their forties were celebrating their 40th wedding anniversary in the style of their youth with a private cruise around the world along with an eight-day dream vacation in Paris. On a bright October day in 2008, Peggy and Chris Prah! boarded a Royal Caribbean's Grandeur of the Seas for a two-week cruise to the Caribbean and then onto Europe. The couple from Swandale, N.Y., were looking forward to a relaxing, romantic, and exciting getaway, away from the rush of everyday life back home. Chris Prah!, who works for a public relations firm, said he and his wife started having an affair in high school and told no one. But on their anniversary he bought her a set of four English miniature cups in the shape of coffee mugs, where they had secretly been kissing for more than a decade. Prah! said the last time he and his wife had time together to share secrets, kiss, make love, or have fun was in high school. But after 40 years of marriage, they decided to take the time to explore their lives as a couple, he said. The cruises and the free time were to start that exploration, he said. Chris's wife, Peggy, whose family founded the Swiss Colony candy business, let her adventurous husband plan the romantic journey. The couple agreed not to let anything spoil the trip, but they were realistic about the rules. "We wanted a fun, romantic time that was not all planned in advance," Prah! said. Besides the romance, the Prahls also wanted a trip that they could afford, so they decided to budget for the trip to Europe with no extras. The couple decided to spend their days exploring the ports they were visiting, visiting the local museums, and taking walks along the coastline. "We said, 'Let's play it safe, but let's not play it safe,' said Peggy. "We thought what would be fun is we could come to Paris, which we hadn't been to in a long time, to visit some friends." The couple decided to do something that both of their families thought was crazy. They decided not to tell any of their friends or family members about the trip. "But they kept saying, 'You have to tell them,' " said Chris. "It was totally our secret. I told [my parents] I was going to a friend's wedding, they didn't

(journal): 31.2.3.12 Static initialization of non-local classes A static initialization of a non-local class is done in the order of initialization of the class's direct base classes and its virtual base classes (10.2, 10.3) (called the sequence of static initialization of the class).

The static initialization of a class X is started by the appropriate definition of the variable X. Why the ordering is unspecified? How could a non-local class depends on the static initialization of other classes? A: The standard does not say the order is "unspecified". It says that it can be done in any order and which order is done is unspecified. The impact of surgery on
