So I'm trying to create a custom flag type that is more "useful" than the standard not-null type. When I add this flag to the custom flag set it does not trigger my validation rules and the params object becomes null when it hits the controller action. For instance I'm trying to add this flag: new Flag { Name = "Test", Type = "Custom", Value = "Optional" }; And I want to validate it's value by doing something like: var test = model.Params.GetRequiredValue("Test"); But I don't see the flag's value when calling the action method. [HttpPost] public void Create(ApplicationModel model) { var flag = model.Params.GetFlag("Test"); if(flag == null) { return; } } Any ideas on how to do this? A: Here's my approach to creating a flag set that allows "super important" flags: public class SuperImportantFlagSet : FlagSet { public SuperImportantFlagSet() : base(new ICommandDescriptor[] { new SuperImportantFlag() }, new IValidator[] { new SuperImportantFlagValidator() }) { } public override bool HasFlag(string key) { var

flags = base.GetFlags();
